Excerpt: .wholly discarding photography, will principally rely upon contact observations at Greenwich and Paris, the Cape of Good Hope, the Bermudas, Florida, the West Indies, the Argentine Republic, New Zealand and Australia; while the Germans will measure the desired distances between Venus and the sun s limbs directly with the heliometer at their home observatories, and their temporary stations on the Atlantic coast of the United States, at Bahia and on the straits of Magellan. But what can the engineer do with his small transit and level and common watch and without subsidies? In view of the elaborate and complete arrangements of the astronomers under the auspices of the various governments of the world, any private effort on the part of engineers would indeed seem utterly useless and absurd, yet their brethren oi the 21st century would certainly not forgive them should they neglect so rare an opportunity, de nied to two whole generations after this, to contribute a mite to the general fund of the world s knowledge onthis interesting occasion. While in the nature of the case all attempts on the part of the engineer, to establish the absolute times of the beginning or end of the transit, or either, at his respective station may be hopeless, he can nevertheless furnish many valuable data for determining effects of refraction and ex plaining attending phenomena, such as the so-called black drop which in former transits have bothered the astroners so much and rendered...
