Fish and Wildlife Service, Willapa National Wildlife Refuge, 1997 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)80920214 Subject: Spartina alterniflora -- Control -- Washington (State) -- Willapa National Wildlife Refuge. Excerpt: . . . Formal scoping meetings for this EA were conducted on January 6, 1997 at the Raymond Community Center in Raymond, Washington and on January 7, 1997 at the Peninsula Church Center in Seaview, Washington. A record of comments recorded at these meetings is available at the Willapa NWR office. Issues and alternatives discussed in this document are those that have been brought forward by both local and regional interests through several years of interagency and public involvement, and the formal scoping meetings conducted in January of 1997. Offsite, land use practices that increase erosion also contribute to sediment accumulation in the bay. Action alternatives that result in effective control of Spartina would release, through erosion, some of the sediment that has been trapped over the years. Changes in Bay Hydrology Water movement through the estuary is affected by the topography of the tidelands. As stated previously, Spartina changes...
